

Consult 4 Kids publishes “Best Practices” each month to share what we’ve learned about high-quality, youth-centered programs.

After each major activity, do a “debrief” with the students.

As a Program Leader you set the tone for your program and the expectations for behavior of the youth assigned to you. Knowing your place in the space supports positive behavior choices.

As a Program Leader you set the tone for your program and the expectations for behavior of the youth assigned to you. Knowing your place in the space supports positive behavior choices.

Ask questions. It’s not having the answers but rather asking good questions that promotes learning.

Assess the effectiveness of each of the protocols and make adjustments and alterations when necessary.